

LESSON 12

FRINGES OF SYNTAX: DEMONSTRATIVES, NUMBERS, AND CONDITIONALS

SECTION 1: REVIEW OF LESSON 11

Quick Summary In Lesson 11, we examined how Syriac attaches direct object pronouns directly to the verb, creating a highly compressed “fast direct object” (e.g.,

Q AṬL - EḤ

, “he killed him” vs.

Q ṬAL L - ĒḤ

, “he killed to-him”).

5-Question Warm-Up Drill (Answers in Section 9) 1. How does Syriac buffer the 1st person singular object suffix on a Peal perfect verb? 2. Translate: Parq-anī. 3. Break down the components of qaṭlhūn. 4. Why does qṭal become qaṭl- when adding a suffix? 5. Translate the double-determined phrase: ʾAsyeh Alāhā l-malkā.

SECTION 2: DEMONSTRATIVES AND NUMBERS — OVERVIEW

As we wrap up our core tour of Syriac syntax, we encounter the final few connective tissues that hold sentences together: Demonstrative pronouns (this, that, these, those) and Numbers.

Cross-Linguistic Comparison: Demonstratives Semitic languages feature a close-range pointing word (“this”) and a far-range pointing word (“that”). * Hebrew: זֶה (zeh — this, m), הַהוּ (hahū — that, m). * Arabic: هَذَا (hādhā — this, m), ذَلِكَ (dhālika — that, m). * Syriac: ܗܢܐ (hānā — this, m), ܗܘܐ (haw — that, m).

Syriac Trick: The far demonstrative (“that”) is spelled and pronounced exactly like the 3rd person independent pronoun (hū = he/it; haw = that). Context dictates the meaning.

SECTION 3: DEMONSTRATIVES & SYNTAX RULES

1. Pointing Words (Demonstratives) Demonstratives in Syriac must agree with the noun they modify in gender and number. Unlike English (which puts “this” before the noun: “this king”), Syriac prefers to place the demonstrative after the noun, or even isolated at the front of a sentence. * Malkā hānā = This king (The king, this one). * Malkūttā hādē = This kingdom. * Gabrē hāllēn = These men.

2. Conditional Clauses (’en) Syriac expresses “If X, then Y” using the particle ’en (if). The “if” half of the sentence is the protasis, and the “then” half is the apodosis. Usually, Syriac doesn’t even use a word for “then”; it simply starts the second clause, often with w- (and). * ’En teḥzē, teida ‘ (If you see, [then] you will know).

3. Comparatives (men) Syriac lacks special adjective forms for “bigger,” “faster,” or “better” (like Greek’s -τερος or English’s -er). Instead, it uses the standard adjective and the preposition men (from/than). * Nūhrā ṭābā hū men ḥešūkā (Light is good from darkness → Light is better than darkness). * Rabbā hī men malkūttā (She is great from the kingdom → She is greater than the kingdom).

SECTION 5: THE NUMBERS 1-10

Semitic numbers famously exhibit “gender polarity”—masculine nouns often take what looks like the feminine absolute number ending, and vice versa. However, you only need to recognize them to read them.

NUMBER	MASC FORM (USED WITH FEM NOUNS)	FEM FORM (USED WITH MASC NOUNS)	TRANSLIT
1	אֶחָד (ḥad)	אֶחָדָה (ḥdā)	(One)
2	שְׁנַיִם (trēn)	שְׁנַיִמָּה (tartēn)	(Two)
3	שְׁלֹשָׁה (tlāt)	שְׁלֹשָׁה (tlātā)	(Three)
4	אַרְבָּע (‘arba ‘)	אַרְבָּעָה (‘arba ‘ ā)	(Four)
5	חֲמִשָּׁה (ḥameš)	חֲמִשָּׁה (ḥamšā)	(Five)

SECTION 7: THE STORY — PART 12

The Departure Narrative note: The conclusion of the initial cycle of Mar Yūkhannan’s acts. The king uses a conditional statement (“If any man...”) to establish a new decree. The section closes with a demonstrative and thematic “peace”.

SECTION 9: ANSWER KEY

The addition of the suffix forces a shift in the stress, causing the vowel a to move forward (qṭa-leh → qaṭ-leh). 5. “God healed him, the king” (Double determination using the suffix and the preposition l-).

Exercise 1: Identification 1. Feminine singular close (This, f) 2. Number three (used with masc nouns) 3. Masculine plural far (Those, m) 4. Number one (f)
